 SOL ART

Biography.

Born in Lima, Peru, Daniella moved to the United States in her early twenties and graduated summa cum laude from the Tyler School of Art at Temple University in Philadelphia. Her extensive travels and residencies in cities such as Buenos Aires, Lisbon, New York, and London have profoundly shaped her multifaceted style, blending influences from theater, dance, and architecture.

Since relocating her studio to the heart of the woods, Daniella has drawn deep inspiration from nature, which has become a central theme in her most recent collections.

Biography

Her work reflects the calm and connection she experiences in this environment, while also fostering awareness about the importance of protecting nature for future generations. She integrates organic elements with her dynamic approach to movement and energy, creating pieces that are both vibrant and contemplative.

Daniella's talent has been recognized internationally, earning her the Highly Commended Artist title at the Artist of the Year Award by VAA in London (2024) and the Best Overseas Painter Prize at the UK's Women in Arts Prize (2021). She has also been a finalist in several prestigious international competitions, including The British Art Prize, and has showcased her work in solo and group exhibitions, art fairs, and international events across Latin America, the United States, Europe, and Asia.

Loved by Nature

Daniella Queirolo presents a new series of large-scale figurative paintings inspired by the emotional bond between humans and nature. Through expressive brushwork, movement, and symbolism, her work explores protection, vulnerability, and transformation.

Created in the solitude of her rainforest studio and often featuring native birds and local fauna, this body of work is both intimate and powerful — a poetic reflection on what it means to be held, seen, and loved by the natural world, which in Queirolo's work often takes on a protective, masculine form.
